Four staff members were honored for exemplary service to their campuses and the community during the University of Colorado Staff Council's annual conference April 8 at the University of Colorado Colorado Springs.

The 2016 Service Excellence Award winners, from the campuses and system administration, were recognized during a luncheon attended by nominators, honorees' family and friends and campus administration representatives. Each honoree receives a $1,000 cash award.

Those honored were:

Carol Calkins, CU Denver I Anschutz Medical Campus Robyn Copeland, CU-Boulder Ida Dilwood, UCCS Karthik Chigururu, system administration
CU Denver I Anschutz Medical Campus

"When we think of service excellence, we think of a number of critical attributes: someone who resolves problems, is responsive, is respectful, is respected, demonstrates honesty and trustworthiness, works efficiently and uses resources wisely, produces high-quality products and delivers hope for much-less expected results," said Neil Krauss, Director of Outreach and Initiatives, Chancellor's Office, CU Anschutz, before introducing Carol Calkins.

Calkins, who has worked in facilities management for more than 20 years, and is director of Facilities Support Services, heads a variety of facilities operations and support services, including custodial, building quality assurance proctors, grounds and landscape services, roads and parking lot maintenance, and fire and life safety – just to name a few.

"The reason I am nominating Carol for this award is because of the efforts she makes behind the scenes that few people are even aware of," wrote nominator Kerrie Bathje, facilities manager. "Without a doubt, she deserves this award."

Beyond her official duties, Calkins has made major contributions to the university. She has been a member of the CU Denver Title IX Review Committee since its inception, and in a voluntary role, reviews investigation reports of complaints of sexual harassment. When she heard that new mothers needed a safe and secure area to pump breast milk, she worked with members of the campus community to increase the number of lactation rooms available to nine from two.

In addition, Calkins serves as co-chair of the Commencement Committee. "She always tells newly involved staff that 'Commencement is like putting on nine weddings in a 24-hour period,'" wrote Bathje in the nomination form. Calkins has created a smooth procedure for the event that includes a detailed, hour-by-hour schedule of duties and a photographic record of the site and inventory of needed items for the event.

She also has served on a variety of committees and has been instrumental in developing and updating various policies and procedures for Facilities Management.

Outside the university, Calkins has been "an invaluable asset to the CampExperience community," said Betsy Wiersma, founder of the volunteer organization that focuses on education, inspiration and connection to support women's empowerment. Calkins' work extends beyond the state. In 2015, she helped gather 400 pounds of donated books, school supplies, shoes and clothing and led a volunteer trip to Project Mercy, an Ethiopian orphanage and school.

"It is an honor for me to know and to have the opportunity to work with such a remarkable and special person like Carol," Bathje wrote. "She truly embodies all of the values of a person of service and a champion of those in need."

Calkins also is a published poet and read a poem she authored about volunteering. She also shared what service to others means to her: sharing with gratitude without any expectations, being mindful and aware of what is around you so that you can see and anticipate the needs of others, moving forward and taking action, understanding that optimism is key success, and having fun and keeping a smile on your face.

CU-Boulder

During finals week at the Wise Law Library, stressed-out students can take a break with a friendly canine as part of the “Paws to Refresh” Therapy Dog Program. Robyn Copeland has coordinated the meeting of man and mutt for the past three years.

The circulation manager at the law library, Copeland oversees a team of 21 assistants who help run the circulation desk and other day-to-day operations. Her numerous duties include marketing, training and providing research assistance to patrons of the library.

She is a member of the Boulder Campus Staff Council and has served on the Outreach and Events committee, assisting with special events including breakfasts and barbecues. She is a member of the CU Advocates program, helping raise awareness about issues affecting higher education.

Outside of work, she has served as an usher for the Chautauqua summer music program, volunteers with multiple food drives in the Boulder-Denver area, and also volunteers at a local public library to help with the literacy needs of adults. For the past year, Copeland has spent five hours every Saturday caring for a 97-year-old man by performing many life duties – preparing meals, housekeeping and providing companionship.

“For the past several years, I’ve been desiring to do something more meaningful in my life and I’ve succeeded,” Copeland told the gathering. “Serving on CU’s Staff Council has allowed me to grow and contribute to the law school and the entire campus more than I’ve ever imagined. I’m hoping to find some new causes in the community to donate my time to. One of my favorite life quotes is from Mahatma Ghandi: ‘The best way to find yourself is to lose yourself in the service of others.’ And that describes me perfectly.”

System administration

If you can access your favorite databases without trouble, it’s likely that you have Karthik Chigururu to thank. Chigururu joined University Information Systems in 2011 and is one of three database administrators (DBA) and is responsible for everything from applying technical patches to keeping the system running smoothly to configuring a disaster recovery setup. He also has played a role in the Elevate project.

He is willing to extend his work day in order to complete assigned projects, according to his nominator, Yuki Busch, a system database administrator. Busch said Chigururu also is committed to his fellow team members. “His work ethic greatly contributed to the fact that a three-person (currently down to two) DBA team can manage complex database systems and doubled workload despite the fact that we used to work as a five- or six-member team.”

He has volunteered for the Rocky Mountain Oracle Users Groups committee to select the abstract for the group’s annual conference and rated submitted papers for the usefulness to the DBA community. He also has won several awards for his excellent customer service approach and an award as professional of the year.

“I don’t have words to express my feelings,” Chigururu said. “I am very glad to be a part of CU. I am fortunate to have a wonderful team and leadership that keeps me motivated.”

UCCS

Ida Dilwood is passionate about helping people. As director of Disability Services at UCCS, she works with students to provide alternative accommodations when necessary, and collaborates with faculty to ensure needed adjustments are made. She coordinates services for visual- or hearing-impaired students and also oversees the Testing Center used by all students needing testing accommodations.

“The demand on this center has increased approximately 100 percent each year for the past few years and she has managed to find a way to meet that growing need,” said Stephanie Hanenberg, who nominated Dilwood.

As chair of the UCCS Blood Drive Committee, Dilwood coordinates several blood drives each year. When issues cropped up that could have canceled the event, Dilwood researched other options in order for the drives to move forward. Dilwood also has organized a staff team to participate in the American Heart Association walk for the past six years. Some of her passion comes from the fact that her son required open-heart surgery and a subsequent blood transfusion as an infant.

Dilwood has served on the UCCS PESA board and UCSC and assists in planning the UCCS annual staff luncheon and other events. She also has served on numerous university committees.

As part of her commitment to those with disabilities, she is involved in a Colorado consortium of disability service directors, and the professional organization, AHEAD. She formed an ADA Task Force on campus to audit services provided and determine whether those services could be delivered more efficiently.

“Ida has made incredible contributions. It’s that caring spirit, that sense of commitment to making not only the university a better place, but the world around her a better place,” said UCCS Chancellor Pam Shockley-Zalabak.

A devoted mother of two, Dilwood is active in school activities and events. She and her husband, Joe, have coached their son’s basketball team.

“I know that UCCS has a lot of great people and I am humbled by this award,” Dilwood said. “I’ve been blessed with supervisors who support my passion and have given me the opportunity to be a contributing member of the university and community.”

RTD’s airport train poised to propel CU brand higher[2]

The long-anticipated University of Colorado A Line train from Union Station to Denver International Airport will usher in a new era of transportation in the Mile High City when it opens next week, but it also is expected to provide a boost to CU’s marketing and branding efforts.

CU entered into a partnership with RTD last year to name the train. RTD is selling naming rights across its FasTracks project for complete lines or for stations. CU campuses and system banded together to purchase the rights to the airport line, which is expected to have the highest ridership of any FasTracks line, an estimated 10 million passengers annually.

“We’re excited to partner with RTD on this project, which brings together the state’s leading public higher education institution with the crown jewel of the largest and newest public transportation project in the nation,” said CU President Bruce D. Benson. “We kicked off our marketing initiative in September, and the University of Colorado A Line will be an important part of our efforts.

“It also allows us to capitalize on Denver’s growing dynamism as a city and regional hub,” he said.

Benson said CU expects to garner millions in publicity value from the initiative. The CU A Line will be one of the first points of contact for national and international visitors.

The line, which has eight stations, will open April 22 with a series of public events and free rides[3]. The 23-mile rail line will take 37 minutes to go from Union Station to DIA, with service every 15 minutes. The one-way cost is $9.

Benson said CU’s marketing initiative has a number of goals: demonstrating the value and contributions of CU’s four campuses in Colorado and beyond, supporting engagement efforts, particularly fundraising, and competing in a busy marketplace. CU faces competition for top students, faculty and staff, as well as philanthropic and research dollars. Its competitors are investing heavily in marketing, whether in state or out of state institutions, traditional campuses or online efforts.

In addition to naming the train, CU gets a variety of advertising and opportunities on trains, in stations and across RTD collateral such as mobile apps, system maps and web.

“This is a great opportunity to elevate our brand and get our name out,” Benson said.

Open Enrollment: Annual eyewear coverage, updated plan network on menu^[4]

If you go through glasses or contact lenses frequently, or if you’re a northern Colorado resident looking for new health care coverage options, you’re in luck this Open Enrollment, 8 a.m. April 25 to 5 p.m. May 13.

During this period, all benefits-eligible CU employees may enroll (or re-enroll) in a revamped vision plan that covers the annual purchase of glasses and contact lenses. Whereas CU Health Plan – Vision previously required enrollees to commit to the plan for two years—and covered eyewear purchases made only every two years—the renewed vision option allows employees to enroll in or waive the plan each year they wish to take advantage of its coverage.

Employees currently enrolled in CU Health Plan – Vision who want to renew this coverage for the upcoming plan year must re-enroll in it. Thanks to the plan’s continued success, premiums will remain unchanged.

“We’re excited to be able to implement this change to give employees a great benefit on a more convenient timeline,” says Tony DeCrosta, chief plan administrator of the CU Health Plan, which designs and manages the university’s plans. “This change to CU Health Plan – Vision is a great example of how we’re able to use members’ feedback to improve our plans.”

The CU Health Plan also has broadened coverage options to benefits-eligible employees who live near the northern Interstate 25 corridor by extending the CU Health Plan – Kaiser network to northern Colorado. This change allows these residents to receive care from the plan’s network of care providers at any northern Colorado Kaiser hospital or clinic.

Employees have three weeks to waive or enroll in CU’s medical, dental, vision, life insurance, disability, and pretax savings and spending plans for the upcoming plan year, July 1, 2016-June 30, 2017. Check the Open Enrollment website at www.cu.edu/oe^[6] in the coming weeks for more information.
