CU community members recognized with President's Diversity, Equity and Inclusion Awards[1]

CU President Todd Saliman is pleased to announce the President's Diversity, Equity and Inclusion Award recipients. This annual recognition honors individuals and units who have demonstrated exceptional dedication and significant contributions to advancing diversity, equity and inclusion across CU.

President Saliman and the Diversity, Equity and Inclusion Awards[2] committee announced the 2023-24 honorees ahead of an awards reception scheduled for April 24 at 1800 Grant St. Recipients of the honor receive $2,000 and a commemorative award.

"Recognizing these outstanding members of the CU community is so important and such an honor," President Saliman said. "I'm incredibly grateful to this year's award winners, and to the members of the DEI Awards Committee, all of whom are going above and beyond to advance diversity, equity and inclusion across the university. It takes all of us working together to further this critical work and to reinforce CU's commitment to fostering a culture and environment on our campuses and at system administration where all students, faculty and staff can feel at home."

This year's CU President's DEI Awardees are:

Student-Undergraduate

Fernanda Cerros is a fourth-year undergraduate student at CU Boulder and will graduate with her bachelor's degree in international affairs and political science this May.

Her advocacy and activism began as a senior in high school in Rifle, Colorado. In the thick of 2020, Cerros became aware of racial tensions in her community and was moved to action. She organized a vigil and march that amassed allies and gained press attention.

Upon graduating high school, Cerros moved with her family to Denver and has remained active in her community. She has been involved in several organizations including the Colorado Change Makers Collective, Public Achievement, Aquetza Youth Empowerment Program and the Puksta Scholarship program.

Through these organizations and experiences, she has mobilized for various causes including advocating for the undocumented community, serving as a mentor for youth, coordinating summer bridge opportunities for high school students, and advocating for underrepresented communities. According to her nomination letter, “rather than a top-down approach to leadership and DEI work, Cerros works directly with local youth at CU and in the community to advance diversity, equity and inclusion. As she involves others in her civic-engaged work and mentors others to create similar initiatives,” Cerros is “helping address another DEI goal: to prepare students to participate in a diverse democracy.”

Student-Graduate

Rebecca Henkind is a fourth-year medical student at the School of Medicine on the CU Anschutz Medical Campus. Originally from New York City, she studied mathematics and economics and minored in Chinese language and literature at Emory University.

In the years between undergrad and medical school, Henkind worked as a medical assistant at the Colorado Coalition for the Homeless and as an EMT on a county ambulance. During medical school, she secured more than $30,000 in grants to co-found and lead the CU Street Medicine student group. She hopes to continue serving people experiencing homelessness throughout her career.

Her nomination letter noted that CU Street Medicine is a “widely acclaimed program that provides care to hundreds of people experience homelessness, homeless health education to students, and community service opportunities for health and pre-health professional students from multiple CU campuses including Anschutz, Boulder and Denver.” Henkind is a “leader who already shines in the field of health equity.”

Henkind will start her internal medicine residency at Massachusetts General Hospital this summer.

Faculty

G. Carole Woodall, Ph.D., is an associate professor of modern Middle East history in the Department of History and co-director of the Asian Studies Minor at UCCS.

She moved to Istanbul in 1991 and lived there for 11 years while pursuing a master's degree and later researching early jazz culture in 1920s Istanbul. The region informs her dedication to leading with compassion and centering the histories and lived experiences of marginalized people.

According to one of her nominators, “during her 15 years at UCCS, Carole has demonstrated a constant commitment to critical inclusive engagement from her teaching repertoire to cultural programming.”

In 2009 and 2011, she curated the interdisciplinary Intersections Film Festival, and in 2016, Woodall facilitated a three-day series at UCCS on “The U.S. and Islamophobia.” Last fall, she organized a two-part Palestine-Israel teach-in series with a commitment to the compassionate recognition of lives lost and the ways in which recent events have impacted the CU and broader Colorado community. Under her leadership, the nominator also stated that the teach-in facilitated “honest and open dialogue on such a contentious issue about such a painful set of current events. Carole was able to pull this off, not by herself, of course, as many others helped, but she was truly the inspiration and organizer.” Woodall was recently awarded the 2023 Middle East Studies Association Undergraduate Education Award.

Staff

Benjamin Ototivo, Ph.D., is a licensed psychologist at Counseling and Psychiatric Services (CAPS) at CU Boulder. A proud member of the Comanche Nation, he grew up on the southern side of his tribal reservation in his native Oklahoma. He currently lives with his family in Colorado.

Ototivo earned his doctorate at the University of Oklahoma and completed his doctoral internship at the University of Northern Colorado, where he was the liaison to the cultural centers on campus. He completed his postdoctoral fellowship at the University of Pennsylvania, where he focused on mental health outreach and community development on campus with Indigenous and first-generation students.

He is currently a multicultural specialist and staff psychologist at CU Boulder. Throughout his career as a clinician and advocate, he has worked toward supporting and developing DEI and social justice efforts in higher education spaces. He now balances carrying a caseload of therapy clients with teaching diversity, equity and inclusion concepts and competencies to staff and staff-in-training.

With the help of the Social Justice and Multicultural Committee at CAPS, Ototivo has worked toward retooling policies and procedures to provide more equitable care to students. According to his nominators, “Ototivo embodies DEI and social justice values in all aspects of the work he does within CAPS. He was instrumental in creating the multicultural care tract for students within CAPS. This track relocated existing resources to allow additional therapy sessions at CAPS for students who do not otherwise have access to mental health care because of financial barriers, being uninsured/underinsured, or those who are unable to use their insurance due to cultural or family stigma. In addition, he was instrumental in creating the DEI resources tab on the CAPS website that provides access to the entire CU community on topics including identity-based trauma, reproductive rights, finding a culturally responsive therapist, self-care, and resources for allies and advocates.”

He is committed to supporting equity in mental health for underserved populations in our community.
Unit

Established in 2001, the Office of Diversity Affairs (ODA) at CU Boulder's Leeds School of Business is dedicated to fostering an inclusive environment for its diverse student body. [3]

Through various initiatives, the ODA actively engages with underrepresented students before and throughout their time at Leeds, while fostering partnerships with local schools, community partners, alumni and businesses.

The cornerstone of ODA’s efforts is the Diverse Scholars Program, which supports about 300 undergraduates annually. Anchored in four key pillars — academic achievement, educational excellence, professional development, and community development — Diverse Scholars have access to high-impact programming and resources to ensure their success. Evidence of ODA’s work is seen in the achievements of Diverse Scholars, who outperform similar demographics at CU Boulder in retention rates, graduation rates and job placement. Diverse Scholars’ strong sense of belonging within the Leeds community also drives high engagement beyond Leeds, advancing scholars toward leadership roles, paid internship opportunities and mentorship.

As the nomination package noted, the “ODA Team does not slow down in the summer months; instead, that is when they conduct their most impactful recruiting, attracting talented applicants from underrepresented backgrounds to Leeds. Notably, the ODA’s successful array of pre-collegiate programs played a significant role in our historic enrollment year in 2023. The Leeds School’s Class of 2027 surpassed every enrollment goal to become the most diverse and academically gifted in the business school’s history, while reaching gender parity for the first time. The ODA’s impact is felt across the entire Leeds community by adding diverse perspectives to classrooms and challenging stereotypes that can harm business outcomes. The tireless and innovative efforts of the ODA are most worthy of celebration and spotlight.”

Regents give approval to 2024-25 recommendations on tuition, fees and compensation[4]

The CU Board of Regents on Friday voted to approve recommendations on tuition, fees, and compensation for the 2024-25 fiscal year. The plan invests in CU faculty and staff and helps keep tuition increases in check, which was made possible by the state’s investment of over a 9% increase in state funding next year.

As approved, the figures will be used by administration in determining CU’s annual budget, which the board will vote on in June.

During the board’s regular meeting April 12 at CU Denver, CU President Todd Saliman and Chad Marturano, vice president and chief financial officer, thanked state leadership for recently approving the significant operating increase in funding for higher education, totaling $107 million. CU’s share is $29.4 million, equal to an operating increase of 9.6%. The state is increasing statewide financial aid by $25.1 million as well.

As outlined in Marturano’s presentation[5] to the board, tuition for undergraduate resident students is slated to increase 3% at CU Denver and UCCS, and for new incoming students at CU Boulder. Continuing CU Boulder undergraduate students won’t see an increase over last year, based on the four-year tuition and fee guarantee. Fees as approved vary by campus.

Resident undergraduate nursing tuition at the CU Anschutz Medical Campus will rise 1.9%.

Marturano noted that the 3% ceiling on tuition increases is below the rate of inflation – 5.2% – during the calendar year 2023.

Compensation for classified staff across the system will increase 3%, adhering to the state requirement.
For non-classified staff, salary merit pools will vary by campus. CU Boulder will see a 4% merit pool in the second of a two-year plan. CU Denver plans a 2% merit pool, assuming an enrollment threshold is met, with a 1% pool for compression, retention and equity, also assuming an enrollment threshold is met. At UCCS, employees earning $85,000 or less annually will be eligible for a 2% merit pool and a pool for compression, retention and equity. Those earning more than $85,000 annually will be eligible for a 1% pool assuming an enrollment threshold is met. CU Anschutz plans a 3% merit pool with a 0.8% pool for compression, retention and equity. The CU system administration pool is limited to 3% for all potential merit, market and equity adjustments.

In three separate votes, the Board of Regents approved tuition, student fee and compensation recommendations 8-1. Regent Mark VanDriel opposed the tuition and compensation plans, while Regent Frank McNulty opposed the student fees recommendation.

In other business at the April 11-12 meeting, the Board of Regents approved two new degrees at CU Denver and one at CU Boulder, all advanced by the Regents University Affairs Committee at its March 19 meeting. The Regents Finance Committee on March 26 had advanced three construction projects at CU Boulder, all of which also received the full board’s approval last week. Read more in CU Boulder Today.

Regents approved a change to the Faculty Housing Assistance Program, which, since 2019, allowed faculty participants to borrow up to $100,000 or 25% of the sales price, whichever is less, when buying a home. The board authorized an increase to $130,000 or 25% of the sales price, whichever is less. The new amount will be effective on July 1, 2024, for participants applying after that date.

The board passed a resolution reaffirming its commitment to the principles of freedom of expression, academic freedom, and shared governance as articulated in Regent Laws and Policies.

The board provided notion of motion regarding Regent Policy 14.I on weapons control, proposed amendments to which are scheduled to be discussed at the Regents University Affairs Committee meeting June 4. Any approved recommendations from that meeting would be forwarded to the full board for consideration at its June 20-21 meeting in Pueblo.

CU’s six newest Distinguished Professors attended last week’s board meeting to be formally recognized and receive their awards: CU Anschutz’s Sean Colgan and Frank deGruy, and CU Boulder’s Brian Argrow, Marie Banich, Shemin Ge and Dragan Maksimovic. Read more on the honorees here.

Benefits rate increases vary by plan

Feedback requested on new Protected Class Nondiscrimination policy

The University of Colorado community is invited to review a newly drafted Protected Class Nondiscrimination Administrative Policy Statement 5065 (APS 5065) and to provide feedback by Wednesday, May 15, before its final consideration by the campus chancellors and the president. The proposed effective date is July 1, 2024.

Led by Valerie Simons, vice president of compliance and equity, a systemwide group of representatives from equity offices and Office of University Counsel met this past year to draft the new APS 5065. The working group shared initial drafts with campus stakeholder offices and is now proceeding with review through the system Office of Policy and Efficiency for stakeholder engagement with students, faculty and staff, campus governance groups and external stakeholders.
The policy was drafted with the following goals in mind:
Align three campus nondiscrimination policies to provide consistent definitions for discrimination, harassment/hostile environment, retaliation, related violations and protected classes. Incorporate new Regent Policy 10A. Ensure compliance with recent changes to state law. Clarify nondiscrimination provisions. Provide guidance and resources for reporting options and confidential resources. Describe role and jurisdiction of Equity Offices. Feedback is requested by May 15 so that the Office of Policy and Efficiency may share it with leadership and the systemwide working group. Community input will inform revisions to the draft before its final presentation to the chancellors and the president.

CU Data Governance: A new systemwide website for data use guidance [18]

25 years post-Columbine, it’s time to invest in ‘violence prevention infrastructure’ [19]

Intelligence artificial: ChatGPT in higher education[20]

Community-based and student-focused: CU Denver’s refreshed brand launches[21]

CU Anschutz moves up in this year’s U.S. News & World Report rankings[22]

Cervantes wins national award for social responsibility[23]

Kling earns Philosophy in Media Fellowship[24]

Shirgaokar examines intersections of transportation, technology, equity [25]

Record levels of funding propel Denver-Boulder to the top of the life sciences market[26]
Materials from Boulder blues icon Otis Taylor now housed at CU Boulder [27]

Americans love true crime. But should we?[28]

Links